Practical Education.

Opinions of the Press.

(Christian Worker, Aug. 18, 1878.)

No young man who anticipates a business career can afford to neglect the advantages of a course of study in a first-class Commercial College. Even for those who intend to devote their lives to agricultural pursuits this course of study will prove of incalculable benefit.

We are aware that the public confidence has been somewhat shaken by the advertisements and pretentions of unprincipled quacks, who knew nothing of what they pretended to teach. But that should not work to the prejudice of institutions of such well-established character and high reputation as the Queen City Commercial College, of Cincinnati, of which Henry A. Faber is President. This school has so long enjoyed the public confidence, and, withal, an extensive patronage, that it is scarcely necessary for us to speak of its merits. It is quite sufficient for us to say that it is devoted to honest and thorough work in the department to which it is devoted, and we do not hesitate to commend it to the readers of the WORKER.

President Faber enjoys the advantage of fifteen years' experience in his speciality, and students may rely upon receiving the most careful and thorough instruction at his college. A term at the Queen City College means valuable accomplishments as the result of honest work.

(Cincinnati Daily Star, Oct. 6th, 1878.)

There are very few young men in the civilized world who have been born under such happy circumstances that they can hope to get along without the transaction of business in some of its manifold forms, for life itself is but a continuous business struggle, and barter and sale seems to have become the chief end of man. It matters little what pursuit or profession a young man may be fitting himself for, he can not shut his eyes to the fact that there will be exchanges to make, business correspondence to conduct, and accounts to keep, which will necessitate some kind of a business education on his part, and the better he has prepared himself in this respect the better he can meet these requirements when they arise.

The farmer, for instance, is too apt to be pointed out as the man to whom a business education would be useless, yet not a day passes in the

(The Merchant and Manufacturer, Sept. 28, 1878.)

In noting the different educational institutions of Cincinnati, we should do great injustice not only to the parties concerned as principal and teachers, but also to the numerous graduates and the general public, should we omit to notice one of the most popular and worthy in its special line, the Queen City Commercial College. This college has since its commencement received a very large share of patronage from our citizens, and is now the largest school of its kind in the state. From their first inception commercial or business colleges have seemed to meet the public fancy or approval in this country to a more general extent than in the old countries, though they have been long established there. If we are not a nation of shop-keepers we certainly are a business men, and one peculiarity of our people is that our young men enter upon their business life ten years earlier than do those of any other people. Our boys leave school at from 15 to 18 years of age, and take their place in the counting-room or banking office. Two-thirds of the active business done in this country is performed and controlled by men under thirty years of age, and it is the advantage which the system of education taught in institutions called commercial colleges, business colleges and the like gives over the old established system, which makes them the recipients of so much favor. It is an advantage which every young man knows he needs to enable him to start fair in the world in competition with his fellows. Different colleges have pursued different theories and systems of instruction. That the course inaugurated by the "Queen City," and still faithfully adhered to, has been successful is best evidenced by the patronage it has received during its four years of existence, the register showing that seven hundred scholars have been enrolled, and the positions which many of them now occupy in the mercantile community is proof of the merit of Prof. Faber's system of teaching.

At the Queen City Commercial College a pupil, on entering, at once commences an apprenticeship to business. His daily life during school hours is a literal business one. He buys and sells, keeps his book accounts, negotiates his foreign exchange, attends to his insurance, transportation and all other details of the counting-house or bank, under the instruction and supervision of competent teachers. Book-keeping, penmanship, commercial arithmetic and commercial law are the prominent studies included in this system, and these branches are taught by practical assistants in a comprehensive and thorough manner, and when the student has graduated he is competent to fill any position in mercantile life. It is no superficial education he has got, but one that makes him familiar with all the details of business, from a deposit ticket to articles of co-partnership.

Of Mr. Faber, the Principal, we have no need to speak. He is well known as one of the most thorough and conscientious of gentlemen, a successfal member of the legal profession, as well as a business man, endorsed by the most prominent citizens, not in our city alone but throughout the State.
